

form of with severely impaired repetition had a lesion involving the left anterior AF, leaving posterior area Spt intact. This supports the notion that the necessary and sufficient basis for the speech repetition deficit is a “disconnection” between posterior and anterior association cortices [9]. Children with injury to other regions of the left or right