

tumor suppressor genes. In cancerization field, multiple oral cancers may develop from independent cell clones. This hypothesis has been supported by data from chromosome X inactivation studies, microsatellite analysis, and p53 mutational analysis. However, newer genetic studies suggested that multiple cancers are often clonally related and derived from expansion