

,

The Duality of Screening Mammography: Advancing Women's Cardiovascular Health

Monica Taylor*

Department of Medicine, McGill University Health Centre, Montréal, Québec, Canada

Abstract

and lifestyle modifications. Women identified with cardiovascular risk factors during mammography should be referred for further evaluation and management. Collaboration between radiologists and primary care providers can ensure comprehensive care and effective management of cardiovascular risks. Long-term studies are needed to assess the impact of BACs detected via mammography on cardiovascular health outcomes. Such studies can provide insights into the prognostic value of