

Biological weapons: a growing concern

Biological weapons are agents derived from living organisms or pathogens that are used to cause illness or death in humans, animals, or crops.

One potential scenario involves the modification of existing pathogens to enhance their virulence, resistance to treatment, or ability to be transmitted over long distances.

References

1. Ahmed AQ, Barbeschi M, Memish ZA (2009)