

Cultures around the world approached death in different ways. For many cultures Death was actually a person, someone who would carry the person into the afterlife. In most cultures, death was the beginning